Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of self-reported depression between men and women who had been exposed to violence by intimate partners. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of Women's Health are used. Results show that among women who have ever been married or cohabited, those who reported being physically abused by their current or former partner were more likely than nonabused women to report having experienced depression during the past 12 months. This association remained significant after controlling for other factors associated with depression.
