

How to Build an ERP Business Case

An ERP business case enables the organization to evaluate the specific benefits, costs and risks of a new ERP system. Here are 7 key steps to building an ERP business case.

Create High-level Implementation Plan

Give all stakeholders an idea of the major stages in the project, the resources that will be needed and the timeframe for achieving results.

Identify Implementation Risks

Clearly explain the risks and describe how they can be mitigated.

Analyze Returns on Investment

Weigh the tangible and intangible benefits against the costs.

Identify and Analyze Current Issues

Identify the specific problems that the organization wants to solve, measuring the business impact of those problems whenever possible and analyzing the processes that cause those issues.

Analyze the Benefits of ERP

Determine how the ERP system will address each of the targeted problems, then define realistic goals for the improvements achieved with the new system.

Evaluate ERP Solutions

Start evaluating specific ERP solutions, determining whether they provide the features you need to deliver the desired business benefits.

Estimate Project Costs

Include the costs of the software plus project implementation costs.
