

CHAPTER 2 AN INTRODUCTION TO COST TERMS AND PURPOSES

2-1 Define cost object and give three examples.

A cost object is anything for which a separate measurement of costs is desired. Examples include a product, a service, a project, a customer, a brand category, an activity, and a department.

2-2 What is the main difference between direct costs and indirect costs?

Traceability is the main specification of direct costs, while it could be either unbeneficial or impractical to trace indirect costs to cost objects. This specification of direct costs enables costing systems to trace direct costs to a particular cost object more accurately, while we need some kinds of allocation methods for assigning indirect costs to a particular cost object.

2-3 Why do managers consider direct costs to be more accurate than indirect costs?

Managers believe that direct costs that are traced to a particular cost object are more accurately assigned to that cost object than are indirect allocated costs. When costs are allocated, managers are less certain whether the cost allocation base accurately measures the resources demanded by a cost object. Managers prefer to use more accurate costs in their decisions.

2-4 Name three factors that will affect the classification of a cost as direct or indirect.

Factors affecting the classification of a cost as direct or indirect include

- the materiality of the cost in question
- available information-gathering technology
- design of operations

2-5 Explain whether a business department can be a cost object.

Yes it can. This is because everything for which you need to know the cost of is called a cost object and a business department is one such item. For example, an organization's supplies and maintenance department is a cost object for the cost of the maintenance supplies and the maintenance employees. At a later stage in the organization's work process, the supplies and maintenance department costs will be assigned to various products, which will also be regarded as cost objects.

2-6 What is a cost driver? Give one example.

A cost driver is a variable, such as the level of activity or volume that causally affects total costs over a given time span. A change in the cost driver results in a change in the level of total costs. For example, the number of vehicles assembled is a driver of the costs of steering wheels on a motor-vehicle assembly line.

2-7 What is the relevant range? What role does the relevant-range concept play in explaining how costs behave?
