

Module 1

Parts A: Accountants As members of the profession

1.1 Public interest or self-interest

The accounting profession is important to the process of ensuring people have access to accurate information. In analysing and presenting information, the professional accountant needs to be able to clearly distinguish between the public interest in disclosing information and any sense of self-interest. So the accounting profession will only retain its integrity and authority by serving the wider public interest.

Professional accountants also serve the public interest by providing objective, accurate and appropriate financial and accounting-related advice that is free from bias and based on expertise. This focus on acting with integrity, objectivity and without bias is linked to the idea of altruism.

The term "altruism" describes positive actions that bring no benefit to an individual and may even be at their own expense.

Responsible decision making

Accountants make decisions within a systematic framework of principles. Includes governance, accountability and ethics so accountant can't simply make decisions according to personal preferences.

1-Governance: Decision making must be within the governance framework of the entity an accountant works within also within the policies and strategies that have been formally approved by the governing body.

2-Accountability: In addition, conducting accounting work and reaching decisions must be completed within a framework of accountability, in terms of the requirements of regulatory authorities, and with the appropriate disclosure to shareholders and other stakeholders.

3-Ethics: the work of the accountant and any decisions taken must be exercised within a framework of ethical conduct.

1.2 Enlightened self-interest

The term 'enlightened self-interest' suggests that both public interest and self-interest

May be served together. But, if enlightened self-interest leads to actions that are purely self-interested with no benefit to other parties such as clients, this is not acceptable professional behaviour. There is a careful balance to be maintained between serving the public interest and pursuing self-interest.
