Children with Autism Spectrum Disorder are differently wired as babies already with atypical looking and behavior. They tend to have no eye contact and do not smile, and do not respond to people with other people and their caregivers. But, unlike, normal babies, who are born knowing what is always expected of them in the world, in Autism Spectrum Disorder, what is always expected appears to be unexpected. This is why the children in Attachment Disorder cannot connect with their caregivers, and are not able to connect with the world. This is why the children in Attachment Disorder are not able to connect with the world. This is why the children in Attachment Disorder are not able to connect with the world.
