In the pharynx, the pharyngeal slits formed and closed again. The pharynx is the site where the skeleton and musculature of the jaws, the thyroid and parathyroid glands, middle ear cavity, and the thymus gland arises.

2. The tissues and organs in the human body possess a recognizable size, shape and position relative to other structures. How would these features compare to other mammals, to other amniotes, and other vertebrates?

Animal form and structure, and function are always related. Structure fits function. Functions of organisms are almost always related to their habitat and mode of life. An example would be the exoskeleton. Humans have skin, which perform numerous functions such as protecting
