Broadcasting, 1982-07 North Jesse M. Keenan, 2025-12-03 Climate change is already influencing how and where people live In North Jesse M Keenan argues that America is entering a new era marked by shifts in population that will transform everything from the physical landscape of cities to electoral politics First Keenan examines how human mobility is shaped by the environment and the economy Next he provides a conceptual and empirical overview of adaptation science with a focus on how people governments and markets are preparing for and responding to climate impacts He documents how physical impacts in the built environment escalating costs and public sector inertia are converging to drive people out of high risk areas while at the same time certain other areas are attracting people who seek a more sustainable way of life North is not just a collection of scientific observations and projections about the peril of those left behind It is also a projection of optimism about America's capacity for decarbonization environmental stewardship and economic mobility for those on the move
