

Upon taking office, Cook decided against immediate major changes. He chose instead to analyze 1973 operations and to wait for the results of the first half of 1974. He instructed the accountant to provide an earnings statement by product line for 1973 (see Exhibit 2). In addition, he requested an explanation of the nature of the costs including their expected future behavior (see Exhibit 3).

To familiarize Magers with his approach to financial analysis, Cook sent him copies of these exhibits. When they discussed them, Magers stated that he thought the 300 series should be dropped immediately, as it would be impossible to lower expenses on 300s as much as 23 cents per 100 pieces. In addition, he stressed the need for cost reduction on the 200 series.

Cook relied on the authority arrangement Magers had agreed to and continued production of all three lines. For control purposes, he had the accountant prepare monthly product line earnings statements comparing actual and standard performance. The accountant used the actual costs from 1973 (Exhibit 2) as the standard costs for 1974. These monthly statements were Cook's basis for making minor marketing and production changes during the spring of 1974.

Late in July, 1974, Cook received the six months' statement shown here as Exhibit 4. This report showed that the first half of 1974 was a modestly successful period. It was not possible to break the variances down by product line because actual costs were only collected for the factory as a whole.

In July 1974, Bosworth announced a price reduction on the 100 series from $2.45 to $2.25 per 100 pieces. This surprising move created an immediate pricing problem for Berkshire. Cook forecast that if Berkshire held to the $2.45 price during the second six months of 1974, unit sales would be 750,000 100-piece lots. He felt that if the price were dropped to $2.25, the six months' volume would be 1,000,000. Cook knew that competing managements anticipated a further decline in industry volume.

Cook and Magers discussed the pricing problem. Since a sales price of $2.25 would be below cost, Magers wanted $2.45 to be continued. He felt the company could not be profitable while selling a key product line below cost.
