

CHAPTER 10

Batching, Mixing, Transporting, and Handling Concrete

The specification, production, and delivery of concrete are achieved in different ways. The basic processes and common techniques are explained here. ASTM C 94 provides standard specifications for the manufacture and delivery of freshly mixed concrete. Standards of the Concrete Plant Manufacturers Bureau, Truck Mixer Manufacturers Bureau, and Volumetric Mixer Manufacturers Bureau can be found on the National Ready Mixed Concrete Association's website at <http://www.nrmca.org>.

Three options for ordering or specifying concrete are described in ASTM C 94:

1. Option A is performance based. It requires the purchaser to specify the compressive strength only, while the concrete producer selects the mixture proportions needed to obtain the required compressive strength.
2. Option B is prescription based. The purchaser specifies mixture proportions, including cement, water and admixture contents.
3. Option C is a mixed option. It requires the concrete producer to select the mix proportions with the minimum allowable cement content and compressive strength specified by the purchaser.

BATCHING

Batching is the process of measuring concrete mix ingredients by either mass or volume and introducing them into the mixer. To produce concrete of uniform quality, the ingredients must be measured accurately for each batch. Most specifications require that batching be done by mass rather than by volume (ASTM C 94 or AASHTO M 157). Water and liquid admixtures can be measured accurately by either volume or mass. Volumetric batching (ASTM C 685 or AASHTO M 241) is used for concrete mixed in continuous mixers.

Specifications generally require that materials be measured for individual batches within the following percentages of accuracy: cementitious material  $\pm 1\%$ , aggregates  $\pm 2\%$ , water  $\pm 1\%$ , and admixtures  $\pm 3\%$ .

Equipment should be capable of measuring quantities within these tolerances for the smallest batch regularly used as well as for larger batches (Fig. 10-1). The accuracy of scales and batching equipment should be checked periodically and adjusted when necessary.

Liquid chemical admixtures should be charged into the mixture as aqueous solutions. The volume of liquid, if significant, should be subtracted from the batched quantity of mixing water. Admixtures that cannot be added in solution can be either batched by mass or volume as directed by the manufacturer. Admixture dispensers should be checked frequently since errors in dispensing admixtures, particularly overdoses, can lead to serious problems in both fresh and hardened concrete.
