Remote Work, Internal Marketing and Human Resource Management Teena Mishra, 2024-12-02

Remote working is a developing idea that many organizations are embracing, especially in light of COVID-19 and the rise in demand for remote and hybrid roles. As there is no standard model to use for implementation, a number of problems and difficulties develop as popularity increases and hybrid working environments become normalized. This book presents the views, opinions, and reality of remote work and creating an appropriate internal marketing culture in a remote environment. The key topics explored are the significance of remote work, remote work practice, reshaping the work environment, designing remote work models, remote work challenges, remote work facing business organizations, remote work management innovations and technology, the role of motivation and satisfaction in organizational development, employee empowerment in a remote setting, transparency and commitment for sustainable development, and the future of remote work. This research volume will be of value to researchers, academicians, practitioners, and students in the fields of human resource management, organizational studies, and innovation management.

Socioeconomic and Travel Demand Forecasts for

Virginia and Potential Policy Responses John Sanders Miller,2009 VTrans2035 Virginia's statewide multimodal transportation plan requires 25 year forecasts of socioeconomic and travel activity Between 2010 and 2035 daily vehicle miles traveled DVMT will increase between 35% and 45% accompanied by increases in population 28% to 36% real household income 50% employment 49% transit trips 75% and enplanements 104% Of the 2.27 to 2.87 million additional Virginians forecast by 2035 most 1.72 to 2.34 million will settle in one of four planning district commissions PDCs These PDCs and their expected population increases are George Washington Regional 0.25 to 0.28 million Richmond Regional 0.33 to 0.41 million Hampton Roads 0.31 to 0.41 million and Northern Virginia 0.83 to 1.23 million Virginia will likely see the number of people age 65 and over double from 1 million at present to 2 million in 2035 Four potential policy responses to these forecasts are given in this report 1 encourage increased density at select urban locations to reduce CO2 emissions 2 use cost effectiveness as a criterion to select project level alternatives for achieving a particular goal 3 identify policy initiatives to serve increased demographic market segments and 4 quantify the economic harm of general aviation airport closures These policy responses are not the only ones feasible but were selected because they necessitate the interagency coordination that is the premise of VTrans2035 The first two policy responses demonstrate limited but real promise The first may reduce DVMT by 1.1% to 6.4% of the baseline 2035 DVMT forecast for a reduction of 1.507 million metric tons of CO2 annually Yet DVMT is affected to a greater degree by factors over which decision makers exert less influence than with density For example the 2035 baseline DVMT decreases by 7% if an alternative population forecast is assumed 10% to 65% if real household income remains relatively flat and 49% to 82% if fuel costs increase to 10 gal by year 2035 Thus the best estimates of travel activity are highly sensitive to underlying assumptions regarding economic conditions and the report accordingly documents for each desired forecast a range of possible values The analysis of the second policy response found that the cost effectiveness of plausible alternatives in a hypothetical case study varied by a factor of 3 By extension this finding suggests that an ability to choose project alternatives based solely on each alternative's ability to meet a single goal or a limited number of goals and without constraint by funding source e.g. highway or transit capital or operations can increase the cost effectiveness of a project The remaining two policy responses suggest that consideration of diverse alternatives such as programs to help older persons continue driving may be productive as suggested in some literature Because the report does not contain the data necessary to evaluate the impacts of these programs the report merely identifies such programs and demonstrates how they could be considered given the demographic changes forecast to occur between now and 2035 Journal of the International Graphical Federation International Graphical Federation,1988
