Analysis and Quantification of Test Driven Development Approach ,2002 Software industry is increasingly becoming more demanding on development schedules and resources Often software production deals with ever changing requirements and with development cycles measured in weeks or months To respond to these demands and still produce high quality software over years software practitioners have developed a number of strategies One of the more recent one is Test Driven Development TDD This is an emerging object oriented development practice that purports to aid in producing high quality software quickly TDD has been popularized through the Extreme Programming XP methodology TDD proponents profess that for small to mid size software the technique leads to quicker development of higher quality code Anecdotal evidence supports this However until now there has been little quantitative empirical support for this TDD claim The work presented in this thesis is concerned with a set of structured TDD experiments on very small programs with pair programmers Programmers were both students and professionals In each programmer category students and professionals one group used TDD and the other control group a waterfall like software development approach The experiments provide some interesting observations regarding TDD When TDD was used both student and professional TDD developers appear to achieve higher code quality as measured using functional black box testing The TDD student pairs passed 16% more test cases while TDD professional pair passed 18% more test cases than the their corresponding control groups However professional TDD developer pairs did spent about 16% more time on development It was not established whether the increase in the quality was due to extra development time or due to the TDD development process itself On the other hand the student experiments were time limited Both the TDD and the non TDD student programmers had to complete the assignment in 75 minutes Professional programmers took ab
