

Immunology Case Study-NUR251

Latex Allergy-Answer Key

Patient Profile

B.N., a 41-year-old woman who is a dental hygienist, has had several surgeries over the past 5 years because of a knee injury. She presents to the outpatient surgery department today for her last reconstructive surgery. Her past medical history indicates she had asthma as a child and had one occurrence of contact dermatitis. She tells you she has no known drug allergies.

You start B.N.'s IV and perform a saline flush. Within three minutes, B.N. states that her IV site itches, and a few minutes later, she begins to complain of tightness in her throat.

Subjective Data

- States IV site itches
- States throat and neck feel tight and says, "I feel like I can't breathe"

Objective Data

- Vital signs: temp 98.8°F, heart rate 120, respiratory rate 32, blood pressure 100/60
- Oxygen saturation 85%
- Wheezing in all lung fields
- Restless
- Swelling at IV site

Discussion Questions

1. What type of altered immune response is B.N. experiencing?

ANSWER: Based on the symptoms of wheezing, tachypnea, tachycardia, and hypotension, B.N. is experiencing an allergic response. It is classified as a type I: IgE-mediated anaphylactic reaction.

Rationale: An anaphylaxis response is an emergency situation that requires immediate interventions.

2. What is the apparent causative factor and what were potential sources of exposure?

The causative factor appears to be exposure to latex. The exposure may have been in the tourniquet used to start the IV, the gloves the nurse was wearing to start the IV, the adhesive used to secure the IV, the rubber plunger in the disposable syringe, or, if the saline flush was drawn up from a vial, from the rubber top of the vial.

ANSWER: Latex allergies are increasing, and the longer the exposure to latex, the greater the risk of developing a latex allergy. The patient has a work history as a dental hygienist. In her role, it is likely the patient has used latex in her job and during her many surgeries.

Rationale: Latex can be found in much of the equipment used in the health care industry. Blood pressure cuffs, stethoscopes, IV tubing, tape, electrode pads, oxygen masks, tourniquets, and gloves are common devices used in many settings across multiple health care settings. The longer the exposure to latex, the greater the risk for developing an allergy.

3. What are the priority nursing interventions in this situation? What medications might you expect the health care provider to prescribe?
