Report Biocides In Textiles 2017 Biocide Information:

Biosorption for Wastewater Contaminants Rangabhashiyam Selvasembian, Pardeep Singh, 2021-10-13 Pollution due to various anthropogenic activities continues to increase. In terms of water pollutants, organic and inorganic pollutants are the most problematic. Although several measures have been proposed and implemented to prevent or reduce contamination, their increased concentration in water bodies has created serious concerns. Over the years, the problem has been aggravated by industrialization, urbanization, and the exploitation of natural resources. The direct discharge of wastewater contaminants and their geographical mobilization have caused an increase in concentration in ground surface, fluvial, and residual waters. Extensive information about detection and disposal methods is needed in order to develop technological solutions for a variety of environments, both urban and rural. This book provides up-to-date information on wastewater contaminants aimed at researchers, engineers, and technologists working in this field. Conventional physicochemical techniques used to remove contaminants from wastewater include ion exchange, precipitation, degradation, coagulation, coating, membrane processes, and adsorption. However, these applications have technological and economic limitations and involve the release of large amounts of chemical reagents and by-products that are themselves difficult to remove. Biosorption, the use of organically generated material as an adsorbent, is attracting new research and scholarship. Thermally treated calcined biomaterials may be treated to remove heavy metals from wastewater. To ensure the elimination of these contaminants, existing solutions must be integrated with intelligent biosorption functions. Biosorption for Wastewater Contaminants will find an appreciative audience among academics and postgraduates working in the fields of environmental biotechnology, environmental engineering, wastewater treatment technology, and environmental chemistry.

Biocides, 2019 This report provides an overview of a series of fact-finding missions on Biocides carried out in EU Member States in 2017 and 2018. Biocidal products are used to control organisms, e.g., pests and microorganisms that are harmful to human and animal health and to the environment. These products are widely used in materials such as plastics, paints, textiles, wood, etc. to protect them against microbial fungi or insect decay. The report shares good practices and challenges with the implementation of the EU's Biocidal Products Regulation, which aims to minimise potential risks from biocide use.

Biocides in Plastics. Rapra Review Reports, 2004 The use of biocides in plastics is commonplace. They are added to protect the plastic from degradation by microbes or to provide an external antimicrobial, hygienic surface. This Rapra Review Report examines the use of biocides in plastics with reference to material types and application requirements. The commonly available biocides are reviewed, and details of their strengths and weaknesses are provided. The author reviews the frequently used test methods for fungi and bacteria and, in an ever-changing regulatory environment, explores the influence of legislation on the current and future use of such biocides. This report will be of interest to biocide suppliers and plastic product manufacturers and to all professionals requiring information on biocide chemistry and application.
