Background

True Respiratory System

A healthy respiratory system allows an individual to receive oxygen and respiratory distress is often one of the first indicators of a life-threatening disease. The function of the respiratory system is to exchange gases (oxygen and carbon dioxide) with the body. The lungs are the primary organ of the respiratory system that performs this function.

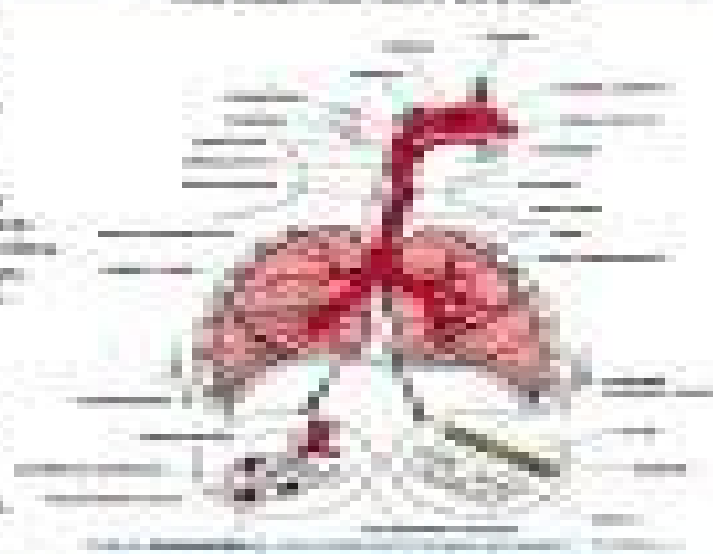

The lungs take up a large portion of the thoracic cavity and are partially attached to the surface of the thoracic cavity by serous pleural membranes. The pleural membranes produce a lubricated surface that allows the lungs to slide on this film. On occasion, air gets caught in the space between the lungs and the thoracic cavity, which causes the lungs to collapse. This may be caused by trauma, infection, or cigarette smoking.

The amount of oxygen needed by the body increases when increased by the body, such as during exercise. During exercise, the heart rate increases, the lungs take up more oxygen, and the body uses more oxygen. The amount of oxygen needed by the body increases when the body is stressed, such as during exercise, and the amount of oxygen needed by the body decreases when the body is relaxed.

Process of Respiration

Order	Process
1	The respiratory system is made up of the trachea, bronchi, and lungs. The trachea is the main airway that carries air into the lungs. The bronchi are the airways that branch off from the trachea and lead to the lungs. The lungs are the organs that exchange oxygen and carbon dioxide with the body.
