Holmes,2012-11-01 A big sister is embarrassed about her younger sister's quirky ways especially her tendency to wear her shoes on the wrong feet in an effort to feel like she's walking around in someone else's shoes The WALKING SHOES , Comparisons of Shoe-Length and Shoe-Width Fitness in People with Diabetes, Diabetes Sensory Neuropathy and Non Diabetes Yu-Tung Victor Tsui,□□□,2017-01-27 This dissertation Comparisons of Shoe length and Shoe width Fitness in People With Diabetes Diabetes Sensory Neuropathy and Non Diabetes by Yu tung Victor Tsui was obtained from The University of Hong Kong Pokfulam Hong Kong and is being sold pursuant to Creative Commons Attribution 3.0 Hong Kong License The content of this dissertation has not been altered in any way We have altered the formatting in order to facilitate the ease of printing and reading of the dissertation All rights not granted by the above license are retained by the author Abstract Introduction III fitting footwear is one of the well known risk factors causing foot ulceration in the diabetic population Current literature for fitness of foot dimensions is insufficient especially on foot shoe length and foot shoe width measurement in absolute numerical differences The aims of the study were to compare and identify the footwear fitness in diabetic patients with peripheral sensory neuropathy diabetic patients without peripheral neuropathy and non diabetes Materials and Method Diabetes patients were assessed for peripheral sensory neuropathy by two sensory tests 10 g monofilament test using 10 g Semmes Weinstein monofilament and vibration perception threshold test using neurothesiometer Abnormal results of both tests indicated diabetes sensory neuropathy The dimensions of foot length and foot width were determined by the Brannock device while internal shoe length and internal shoe width were measured by an inside caliper The mean of internal shoe length difference and shoe width difference of three groups were calculated and compared. Reference ranges of 10–15 mm of shoe length difference and 0–7 mm were selected from past literature. The values of shoe length and shoe width differences were dichotomized into correct and incorrect fit category. Footwear fitness of the three groups was compared. Demographics of patients, information on self foot care, shoe size check, and footwear habit were collected for correlation analysis.

Results

Data was collected from 20 diabetes patients with sensory neuropathy, 60 diabetes patients without neuropathy, and 40 non-diabetes controls. There was significant difference in shoe length difference among three groups with larger shoe length difference in diabetic neuropathy group (left 21.9 mm, right 21.7 mm) followed by non-neuropathy diabetes (left 15.2 mm, right 15.5 mm) and controls (left 13.4 mm, right 14.5 mm) (left $p = 0.002$, right $p = 0.008$). The shoe length differences of both diabetes groups exceeded the reference range, indicating long footwear. No significant difference was reported related to shoe width difference.

Analysis of shoe fit category showed around 15.17% of diabetes patients were wearing correctly fit shoes in both length and width. A high prevalence of diabetes patient had ill-fitting footwear, while nearly half of them wear shoes with correct width but incorrect length. There is nearly no correlation between shoe length fit, shoe width fit, and frequency of self foot check, frequency of footwear size check, and frequency of diabetic footwear education.

Discussion

Most diabetes patients wear ill-fitting footwear, especially those with peripheral sensory neuropathy when compared to control group. There is significant difference in shoe length difference among the three groups with reference to the 10–15 mm range as the gap length allowance. Diabetic patients tend to wear long and loose footwear in this study, even they had past foot education and practice proper self foot check regularly. These might imply incomplete proper diabetic footwear education and self footwear assessment in current diabetes care pathway. These components are essential in diabetes foot care, and people with diabetes are highly recommended to select a pair of good fit footwear. Further research is required to standardize the methodologies of
