Regression Analysis Ashish Sen, Muni Srivastava, 2012-12-06 Any method of fitting equations to data may be called regression. Such equations are valuable for at least two purposes: making predictions and judging the strength of relationships. Because they provide a way of empirically identifying how a variable is affected by other variables, regression methods have become essential in a wide range of fields including the social sciences, engineering, medical research, and business. Of the various methods of performing regression, least squares is the most widely used. In fact, linear least squares regression is by far the most widely used of any statistical technique. Although nonlinear least squares is covered in an appendix, this book is mainly about linear least squares applied to fit a single equation as opposed to a system of equations. The writing of this book started in 1982. Since then, various drafts have been used at the University of Toronto for teaching a semester-long course to juniors, seniors, and graduate students in a number of fields including statistics, pharmacology, engineering, economics, forestry, and the behavioral sciences. Parts of the book have also been used in a quarter-long course given to Master's and Ph.D. students in public administration, urban planning, and engineering at the University of Illinois at Chicago (UIC). This experience and the comments and criticisms from students helped forge the final version. Regression Analysis Ashish K. Sen, Muni S. Peter Aimer, 2013-11-01 Based on a nationwide survey of voters, this is a study of the historic 1993 New Zealand general election and referendum. It seeks to explain why New Zealanders made the choices they did: an extremely narrow majority for the National Party and a decision to shift to MMP representation. Towards Consensus? Jack Vowles, 1995 The authors build their analysis on the rich data provided by replies of over 2000 voters and more than 1000 political party activists and parliamentary candidates surveyed immediately after the election.
