Abstract

Necrotizing fasciitis is a rare but potentially serious and fatal infection. It is a dermo-hypodermatitis with necrosis of the superficial fascia, typically caused by Streptococcus pyogenes. However, rare cases of fungal necrotizing fasciitis have been reported. We report the case of a 65-year-old type II diabetic patient who developed necrotizing cellulitis of the right hemiface with homolateral orbito-palpebral extension. The initial management was based on drainage of purulent collections with resection of necrotic tissues associated with parenteral antibiotherapy without clinical improvement. Bacteriological sampling revealed the presence of yeast. The mycological examination was positive for Candida albicans resistant to fluconazole. Antifungal treatment with intravenous amphotericin B was initiated with good clinical progression and complete remission after 1 month. The aim of this paper is to highlight the importance of promptly considering this diagnosis and extending the initial assessment of necrotic skin lesions to include mycological examination to detect severe forms of cutaneous candidiasis.

Introduction

Necrotizing fasciitis is a dermo-hypodermatitis with necrosis of the superficial fascia [1,2]. This condition mainly affects the limbs or trunk. The face and neck region are rarely involved [3,4]. The most frequently implicated pathogen is Group Aβ-hemolytic Streptococcus, but it is often a polymicrobial infection involving co-infection with anaerobic bacteria.

It mainly affects individuals with conditions that compromise the immune system, exposing them to a high risk of infection, particularly diabetes. Its rapid and severe progression can compromise the patient's prognosis, leading to a high mortality rate. The prognosis depends on early diagnosis and treatment. Necrotizing fasciitis caused by fungal infection is extremely rare. We report a rare case of necrotizing fasciitis of the face secondary to a Candida albicans fungal infection in a diabetic patient.

Case Report

A 65-year-old female with a history of type II diabetes on oral antidiabetics was presented to the emergency department for the management of necrotizing fasciitis of the right hemiface associated with homolateral orbital cellulitis, which had been evolving for 15 days. Clinical examination on admission revealed erythematous, infiltrated, warm and painful patch with ulceration and necrotic areas involving the entire right hemiface, accompanied by significant inflammatory palpebral edema. Furthermore, the patient reported a history of minor facial trauma occurring a few days prior.

Laboratory values at the time of his admission included a white blood cell count of 27 000/mm<sup>3</sup>, a C-reactive protein level of 83 mg/L with impaired renal function that normalized after intravenous hydration measures. At the same time, a facial Computed
