

Potter and Perry Chapter 33 Self-Concept Questions And Answers 2022

The nursing student can help geriatric patients' self-concept by using which technique?

- a. Discussing current weather
- b. Reviewing old photos with patients
- c. Encouraging patients to sing
- d. Allowing patients extra computer time - Answer- B

Nurses can improve self-image by reviewing old photographs when working with elderly patients. This form of life review is helpful to older adults in remembering positive life events and people. Discussing weather does not involve personal reflection. Singing improves global cognition, not self-concept. Giving patients extra computer time is not applicable to improving self-concept.

While gathering an adolescent's health history, the nurse recognizes that the patient began to act out behaviorally and engage in risky behavior when her parents divorced. In considering an altered self-concept nursing diagnosis, the nurse would gather what information?

- a. How long the parents were married
- b. How the patient views her behaviors
- c. Why the parents are divorcing
- d. Why she is acting out of control - Answer- B

A nurse can identify situational life stressors that can impact a person's self-concept. By openly exploring a patient's thoughts and feelings, the nurse will be able to use communication skills in a therapeutic manner. This will facilitate the patient's insight into behaviors and will enable the nurse to make referrals or provide needed health teaching. The length of time married and the reason for the parents' divorce do not explain the patient's behaviors. Why the patient is out of control is not as important as how the patient views her actions when out of control.

Based on the following data, which person is likely to have the highest self-esteem?

- a. Latino adolescent female who has strong ethnic pride
- b. Caucasian boy who lives below federal poverty level
- c. African American adolescent male who has severe acne
- d. Adolescent who was suspended twice from high school - Answer- A

Ethnic and cultural differences in self-concept and self-esteem have been noted across the life span. Ethnic pride and self-esteem often are positively correlated. Environmental stressors such as low-income, body image stressors such as acne, and role performance failure often influence self-esteem negatively.

The developmental self-concept task known as initiative versus guilt would occur in which person?

- a. 3-week-old neonate
- b. 5-year-old kindergarten student
- c. 11-year-old student
- d. 15-year-old high school student - Answer- B
