

CHAPTER 21

CAPITAL BUDGETING AND COST ANALYSIS

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

1. Recognize the multi-year focus of capital budgeting.
2. Understand the six stages of capital budgeting for a project.
3. Use and evaluate the two main discounted cash flow (DCF) methods: the net present value (NPV) method and the internal rate of return (IRR) method.
4. Use and evaluate the payback method.
5. Use and evaluate the several accounting rate of return (ACRR) method.
6. Identify and resolve conflicts from using DCF for capital budgeting decisions and accrual accounting for performance evaluation.
7. Identify relevant cash inflows and outflows for capital budgeting decisions.

CHAPTER OVERVIEW

Chapter 21 looks at long-run decisions, those spanning multiple years. The focus moves from operations of a short-by-year approach to that of an entire life span of a project. The accounting for capital budgeting on a project-by-project approach is similar to life-cycle costing, introduced in Chapter 12. The role of the management accountant is highlighted in the six stages of capital budgeting.

Three quantitative methods used to making capital budgeting decisions are described and illustrated. The two methods that focus on cash flows and the time value of money are net present value and internal rate of return, discounted cash flow models. Typically, the discounted cash flow methods are superior for providing information on the decision-making process because they are the most comprehensive in scope. The concept of money having time value is a main feature of these models. The other methods described are the payback method and the several accounting rate of return. The payback method does use cash flows as a basis but does not incorporate time value of money nor profitability. The several accounting rate of return does not focus on cash flow but uses numbers from the income statement. The role of money time value is emphasized within the chapter and the role of inflation is in the appendix to the chapter.

Though the methods presented provide a basis on which to make a quantitative financial decision, the chapter focuses on importance of supplemental qualitative and qualitative aspects for each decision. The benefit of analyzing a decision using a different model than the one used to make the initial decision is also noted.
