

CHAPTER 6: A TOUR OF THE CELL

1 : BIOLOGISTS USE MICROSCOPES AND TOOLS OF BIOCHEMISTRY TO STUDY CELLS

3 important factors in microscopy:

- Magnification: the ratio of an object's image size to its real size.
- Resolution: a measure of the clarity of an image (minimum distance between two distinguishable points)
- Contrast: accentuates differences in parts of the sample

Light microscopes can magnify effectively to about 1,000 times the size of the actual specimen.

- At higher magnifications, the image blurs.
- Light is passed through a specimen and then through a lens, the image is magnified and projected into the eye

The electron microscope (EM) uses a beam of electrons to create an image of the specimen.

- It is capable of much higher magnifications and has a greater resolving power than a light microscope, allowing it to see much smaller objects in finer detail

Transmission electron microscopes (TEM): used mainly to study the internal ultrastructure of cells.

- A TEM aims an electron beam through a thin section of the specimen.

Scanning electron microscopes (SEM) are useful for studying surface structures.

- The sample surface is covered with a thin film of gold.
- The beam excites electrons on the surface.
- These secondary electrons are collected and focused on a screen.
- The SEM has great depth of field, resulting in an image that seems three-dimensional.

CELL FRACTIONATION

A process called cell fractionation is used to separate organelles of the cells so that their individual functions can be studied.
