2. SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

Even if you are accustomed to working with radio control systems, read these operating instructions without fail before using this equipment. Only this document contains the latest information relating to your NBB radio control system.

For explanatory notes on obtaining an operating permit please refer to registration documents enclosed in the appendix of this operating instruction. Observe all applicable work-safety and accident prevention regulations without fail. Only fully trained, authorized personnel may use the NBB radio control equipment. Components, etc. built into the NBB equipment for safety purposes must be regularly inspected.

If the NBB radio control unit develops a fault, it must be shut down immediately. The transmitter should be switched off with the EMERGENCY STOP switch. The connecting cable must be disconnected at the receiver from the connecting socket (terminal) of the unit to be controlled. The repair of the equipment must not be carried out other than by NBB or an NBB authorized technician.

Failure to observe these recommendations will put both you yourself and others at risk. Under these circumstances, NBB rescinds the guarantee and any other form of liability. This radio control unit is designed exclusively for the control of construction machines and industrial plants. Only under these conditions are the safety systems (EMERGENCY STOP, zero setting) fully effective. No other form of use is permitted.

Any non-observance of this condition will relieve NBB of all liability.

3. TRANSMITTER

Pocket-S, -V, -F,
Pocket-V-3, -V-9

To make the unit ready for use, insert the battery into the battery compartment. To remove the battery, depress the pin and push out the battery. The power supply to the transmitter is activated with the EMERGENCY STOP switch (when depressed, the EMERGENCY STOP switch can also be secured by removing the key cap). The green LED on the transmitter control panel must flash regularly. Commands can now be input by means of the controls. The operating period with a charged battery is approximately 8 hours with the transmitter in continuous use.

When the red "Battery" indicator lamp lights up, the battery is nearing exhaustion. The transmitter can be operated for approximately 15 minutes more in this condition. During this time, bring the unit to a safe position and install a new battery. Removal of the battery interrupts the radio link. As a result, the master switch for the unit to be controlled must be switched on again. Charge the discharged battery with the charger supplied.
