Outsourcing and Offshoring Business Services

Leslie P. Willcocks, Mary C. Lacity, Chris Sauer, 2017-07-25 Bringing together theoretical and empirical studies from the Journal of Information Technology this book provides a definitive guide to research discovered on the growing global sourcing phenomenon Paying particular attention to Information Technology Outsourcing ITO and Business Process Outsourcing BPO theoretical chapters explore insightful ways of thinking about the different facets of outsourcing and provide useful information to practitioners and researchers Empirical chapters report the findings of 405 major research studies into the risks and successes of relationships between customer and vendor the development of trust in these relationships the factors affecting locations for offshoring and specialized offshoring organizations such as captive centres In this comprehensive study the editors present an expert review of the historical development of this field and offer analysis of emerging findings and practices for the future Outsourcing, Offshoring and the United States Office Market Tanya M. Topolewski, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Department of Urban Studies and Planning, 2004 There is intense debate among industry analysts and scholars over potential job losses caused by offshoring The real estate industry has been grappling to understanding the implications of these numbers as some have speculated that the projected job losses seem to translate into significantly lower demand for US office space Professional service firms are major users of office space and these firms are increasingly dependent on IT in nearly every aspect of their business Due to its technical nature and expense these industries routinely outsource and or offshore both major categories of IT work application services AO and business process BPO To explore how IT outsourcing and offshoring is affecting the US office market this work examined three professional services industries high tech manufacturing service and financial services aggressive adopters of IT and legal services a non aggressive adopter of IT Through a review of relevant research and structured interviews with eighteen companies this thesis examined IT outsourcing and offshoring activities with respect to three areas labor force access company portfolios and workspace utilization design Industry analysts observe that most firms do not yet have global outsourcing strategies in place but they need to This work concludes that firms outsourcing and offshoring activities vary across and within industries in relation to labor access and company work place portfolios High skill labor that can create innovative services drives high tech manufacturing firms to access IT labor worldwide while in financial services firms cost as well as innovation drives their global strategy In complete contrast legal services firms are cost driven but not dependent on innovation to provide their services and therefore do not outsource or offshore IT From a company portfolio standpoint while client location will always bind certain companies to particular locations and markets IT outsourcing and offshoring may make where they locate more flexible However in contrast to the direct relationships between IT outsourcing and offshoring and labor access and portfolio strategies evolutions in workplace strategies across firms including support of mobile work forces increases in space efficiency new communication strategies and work area obsolescence appear to be more related to firm innovation and the integration of technological breakthroughs International outsourcing strategy and

Willcocks, 2009-10-09 This book offers a broad perspective on issues relating to the sourcing of systems and business processes in a national and global context examining the client's and the vendor's involvement in sourcing relationships by putting the emphasis on the capabilities that each side should develop as a result of their interactions with each other

Outsourcing and Offshoring Mari Sako, 2009 This paper provides a discussion of key issues which emerged from a review of the debate on offshoring and outsourcing Although offshoring is not a new phenomenon the current phase of offshoring is marked by the increased tradability of services enabled by ICT The paper puts forward a clear definition of offshoring defined as a combination of trade flows FDI and employment shifts before doing three things First official statistics on international trade and FDI were examined to gauge the extent of offshoring in services Second the paper analyses the causes and consequences of different types of outsourcing seen as strategies for corporate restructuring Third the impact of outsourcing on jobs and professions is assessed in terms of the repackaging of tasks skills and knowledge Our challenge in having an informed debate about offshoring is a to articulate the benefits and costs of offshoring by linking the three areas namely trade and FDI corporate strategy and employment and b to collect better data both official statistics and private surveys that enable us to link micro level business decisions on outsourcing and offshoring to sectoral and economy wide outcomes Even with inadequate data however this paper provides pointers to answer such questions as Why is outsourcing and offshoring happening now What is the impact of outsourcing offshoring on home and host economies What policies should be devised to address the causes and consequences of offshoring The key points raised in this paper are as follows 1 Definitions Offshoring happens when private firms or governments decide to import intermediate goods or services from overseas that they had previously obtained domestically It is therefore about sourcing decisions which involve a imports b displacement of domestic production and associated jobs and sometimes c foreign direct investment FDI outflows if sourcing happens from overseas affiliates It is difficult to combine three separate sources of data to measure the precise extent of offshoring defined in this way 2 Trade and FDI Bearing in mind the limitations to official statistics they indicate that offshoring of services is quite small relative to that in manufacturing In particular World trade in services valued at 1.8 trillion in 2003 is still only a fifth of that in manufacturing Only 10% of services output enter international trade whereas 50% of manufacturing does indicating that offshoring of services is small relative to outsourcing within national borders 4 Despite this small size the tradability of services is expected to grow especially in business services including IT and professional services which make use of ICT The top two exporters of computer services are Ireland and India but the top two exports of other business services are the US and the UK Unlike in manufacturing the US and the UK maintain a trade surplus in business services In part because of such trade surplus job losses embodied in offshoring is quite small at 2.4% of total employment in the US in 2003 For emerging markets the Indian model of promoting export platform FDI in software and business services provides one but not the only template for promoting them as offshore locations 3 Corporate Strategies Growth in outsourcing and offshoring of business services depends on the nature of corporate strategy and business models Corporate strategies to outsource business services became established only in the late 1990s driven primarily by the ICT revolution and the Anglo American shareholder value business model in which CEO CFO takes a lead to reduce costs and improve return on assets Asset sales are therefore just as important as relocating to low cost areas The current phase of outsourcing and offshoring is marked by two distinct types of outsourcing first the unbundling and re centralisation of corporate functions and second vertical dis integration of inputs The former affects all sectors of the economy including manufacturing and the public sector These two distinct types of outsourcing offer emerging market suppliers different opportunities to upgrade their capabilities and to create higher value added In particular these suppliers that entered markets via the provision of low value added standardized services may move up the supply chain e g in software or deepen their functional knowledge in business services 4 Jobs and Professions The movement of service jobs from developed economies to low cost emerging market locations is being accompanied by significant repackaging of tasks skills and knowledge into a job occupation or profession This is leading to changes in occupational and professional identity and is creating new challenges for governments formulating their policies for education and training and for professional associations thinking about the upgrading of capabilities
