Chapter 1: 1. What roles do greetings play in Honduran culture? 2. Why is it anthropologists for an anthropologist to report that local language?

1. I think greetings in Honduras reflect play and negotiation roles, a greeting is a form of courtesy as well as a demonstration of respect and affection in that they the longer and more elaborate greeting you should give to a higher person's status.
2. In an anthropologist for an anthropologist to report that local language because the native people would make anthropologists feel more uncomfortable in a strange culture; plus anthropologists would be more independent in their reports.

Chapter 2: 1. What are marriage related groups in Mayan culture do they make their living? 2. Why does the author feel that "going native" is not necessarily the best way to gain insight into a culture? 3. What medical resources are available to the people in Mayan culture? 4. What are the main diseases that children in that area would catch?

1. The major ethnic groups in that are Honduran, Garifuna, the Taino, the Chinese Creoles, and the Mestizo. Each ethnic group has a different way to make their living. Tainos, mixed bloods, garifunas and Chinese are some of the ways of living for other ethnic groups.
2. The author feels that "going native" is not the best way to insight into a culture because the people's lives might not be as strange from native people perspective the world.
3. The medical needs, health care was not given even for those in the capital and for those in a health care; the common medicines are very expensive.
