As noted by anthropologist Robert Leach, it is dangerous that the study of national character may lead to over-generalizations. As we try to get inside a national soul, we must realize, Leach says, that there are differences and similarities that give the character a unique twist that says they are "inhabited" because they are. They are human, above a character's construction, and particularly those that suffer, and all share and inherit common values.

Many scholars continue to debate the degree to which the United States is a "superpower." For example, "America is a super-power because it has the capacity to influence the world's political, economic, and cultural affairs" (Barnett, 2002, p. 100). Others argue that the United States is no longer a superpower because it has lost its military and economic dominance (e.g., Barnett, 2002, p. 100). The debate continues.
