DISPROPORTIONALITY IN EDUCATION AND SPECIAL EDUCATION Amity Lynn Noltemeyer, Caven S. Mcloughlin, 2012-07-01 Given the burgeoning number of diverse students in our nation s schools coupled with the potentially negative outcomes and wasted resources associated with the misidentification of students for special education and excessive use of exclusionary discipline for specific subgroups of students it is imperative that educational professionals understand and address the implications arising from disproportionality for children both with and without disabilities This text contributes unique perspectives and up to date information including advances and research that have emerged since the last of the extant books was published Presented in three sections the first considers disproportionality in special education identification with chapters examining overrepresentation by ethnicity gender and language The second section addresses disproportionality in discipline specifically focusing on inequalities in school disciplinary actions and juvenile justice decisions based on ethnicity and gender The final section provides readers with approaches for addressing disproportionality and creating more equitable learning environments now and in the future The text encourages bidirectional and evolving relationships between the topics examined in each chapter with the historical framework presented Because of the comprehensive nature of the topics covered in the book it is an ideal one stop reference for readers aiming to acquire a broad understanding of the key issues related to the topic The book will appeal to a range of potential readers including university students and practitioners in the fields of education psychology sociology gender studies ethnic studies and criminal justice as well as lay readers interested in issues of equality and or education

Disproportionality and Social Justice in Education Nicholas Gage, Luke J.

Rapa, Denise K. Whitford, Antonis Katsiyannis, 2022-10-25 This book examines disproportionality in education focusing on issues of social justice for diverse and marginalized students. It addresses disproportionality as an indicator of biased practices and uses social justice as the frame for conceptualizing disproportionality historically and as a means to improve educational practice. Chapters explore the historical issue of disproportionality in education outcomes experienced by racially and ethnically diverse students and students with disabilities including discipline, bullying, and academic achievement and ways in which social justice can inform policy and practice to make a positive impact reducing disproportionality in education. Key areas of coverage include Methodological and statistical concerns in disproportionality research in education. Reviews research and data on disproportionality in education e.g. disciplinary exclusion, bullying, seclusion and restraint, corporal punishment, school-based arrests, and academic achievement. Social justice as a theoretical and legal driver for change in policy and practice. Educational assessment and intervention practices designed to address disproportionality in education. Disproportionality and Social Justice in Education is a must-have resource for researchers, professors, and graduate students as well as clinicians, practitioners, and policymakers across such disciplines as clinical child and school psychology, educational psychology, and teaching and teacher education, social work, and counselling, pediatrics, and school nursing, educational policy, and politics, public health, and all interrelated disciplines.

Solving Disproportionality and Achieving Equity Edward Fergus, 2016-10-28 When the numbers don't lie, this is your guide to doing what's right. If your school is faced with a disproportionate rate of suspensions, gifted program enrollment, or special education referrals for students of color, this book shows how you can uncover the root causes and rally your staff to face the challenge head-on. You will understand how bias creates barriers to the success of students of color. Know what questions to ask and what data to analyze. Create your own road map for becoming an equity-driven school with staff activities, data collection forms, checklists, and progress monitoring tools.

Solving Disproportionality and Achieving Equity Edward Fergus, 2016-10-28 When the numbers don't lie, this is your guide to doing what's right. According to federal data, African American students are more than three times as likely as their white peers to be suspended or expelled. As a school leader, what do you do when your heart is in the right place but your data show otherwise? In Solving Disproportionality and Achieving Equity, Edward Fergus takes us on a journey into disproportionality by engaging our hearts and minds on the presence of biases that create barriers to the success of students of color. If your school is faced with a disproportionate rate of suspensions, gifted program enrollment, or special education referrals for students of color, this book shows how you can uncover the root causes and rally your staff to face the challenge head-on. You will understand through compelling vignettes and case studies how bias affects policies and practices even in good schools. Know what questions to ask and what data to analyze to get to the root cause. Create your own road map for becoming an equity-driven school with staff activities, data collection forms, checklists, and progress monitoring tools. If you are interested in developing a deep understanding of the policy, practice, and beliefs necessary for schools to address

Hernández,David M. Lopez,Reed Swier,2022

This book positions disproportionality as not solely a special education issue but rather a broader issue of educational inequality. Disproportionality in special education parallels a persistent history of chronic socioeconomic and racial inequalities relating to the country's history of denying educational opportunities to students of color, multilingual students, students with disabilities, and those at the intersections of these identities. This book draws on the authors' experiences as technical assistance providers with the Center for Disproportionality, coupled with the latest research findings on the causes of racial disproportionality in general and special education. Dismantling Disproportionality examines four district case studies showing how each progresses from theory to practice in delivering educational services to all students. The authors conclude that the most effective way to address disproportionality is to use a culturally responsive educational systems approach that critically engages practitioners at the intersection of beliefs, policies, procedures, and practices. Book Features
