

General Principles of Plant Disease Management

1. Avoidance: Avoiding disease by planting at times when, or in areas where, inoculum is ineffective due to environmental conditions
2. Exclusion of inoculum: Preventing the inoculum from entering or establishing in the field or area where it does not exist
3. Eradication: Crop rotation, sanitation, eliminating or destroying inoculum at the source, either from a region or from an individual plant in which it is already established
4. Protection: Preventing infection by creating a chemical toxic barrier between the plant surface and the pathogen
5. Disease resistance (Immunization): Preventing infection or reducing the effect of infection by managing the host through improvement of resistance in it by genetic manipulation.
6. Therapy: chemotherapy and thermotherapy.

1. Avoidance of the pathogen: These methods aim at avoiding the contact between the pathogen and the susceptible stage of the crop. This is achieved by

- Proper selection of geographical area: Selection of geographical area for any crop is made based on the suitable climate for the crop. The same climate may be suitable for the activities of the pathogen also. Many fungal and bacterial diseases are more severe in wet and dry areas. Bean anthracnose is common in wet areas where seeds produced are generally infected. For seed production bean dry areas are always preferred. Smut and ergot of pearl millet are serious in areas where rains occur for long durations during flowering of the crop. Cultivation of this crop in such areas therefore not profitable
- Proper selection of the field: Proper selection of the field will help manage many diseases, especially soil-borne diseases. Raising a particular crop year after year in the same field makes the soil sick, where disease incidence and severity may be more. Examples like late blight of potato (Phytophthora infestans), green ear of bajra (Sclerospora graminicola), etc.
- Time of sowing: Generally, pathogens can infect the susceptible plants under certain environmental conditions. Alteration of the date of sowing can help in the avoidance of favorable conditions for the pathogen. Thus, late-sown winter crops escape the incidence of root rot and wilt favored by high temp. and moisture that usually occurs after the summer/rainy season.
- Disease escaping varieties: Certain varieties of crops escape disease damage because of their growth characteristics. Ex: in India Early maturing varieties of pea escape the damage due to powdery mildew which becomes serious in January or later.
- Proper selection of seed and planting material: Selection of seed and seedling material from healthy sources will effectively manage the diseases such as loose smut of wheat, bunchy top of banana, Panama wilt of banana and whisp smut of sugarcane. Potato seed certification or tuber indexing is followed for obtaining virus free seed tubers. Citrus bud wood certification programme will help in obtaining virus free planting material.

II. Exclusion of inoculum

- It means preventing the entrance and establishment of pathogens in uninfected crops in a particular area.
