

Historical maps 1: Ancient Greek Civilization

Our knowledge about many aspects of the earliest Greek cultures (Minoan and Mycenaean) is severely limited because relatively few written documents have been found and the languages have not been effectively deciphered. In any case, there were many differences between these earlier civilizations and the subsequent Greek culture which had such an enormous impact as the foundation of Western civilization. Depending upon the choice of criteria, the beginning of the Archaic Greek Period is somewhere between 1000 B.C.E. and the traditional date for the first Olympic games in 776 B.C.E.. Available evidence suggests that original Greek contributions to mathematics began during the last century or so of the Archaic Period, whose end is marked by historical events which took place around 500 B.C.E.. The Archaic Period was followed by the Classical Period, which includes a large number of major cultural and political figures including Socrates, Plato and Aristotle.

This map shows the extent of Greek settlements during the early period of Greek mathematics. Most of the activity took place in present day Greece, the coastal areas of present day Turkey, and the southern part of Italy, including the island of Sicily. There is a more detailed map of ancient Greece and coastal Asia Minor (the Asian part of Turkey) on the next page. Unlike many other early civilizations, there were many small states rather than a handful of large kingdoms or empire, partly due to the geography of the area, in which mountains and seas were major barriers between different population centers.
