

Chapter 6

- Notes Receivable – Claims supported by formal promises to pay usually in the form of notes.
 - The note may be payable on demand or at a definite future date.
 - Standing alone, the term notes receivable represents only claims arising from sale merchandise or service in the ordinary course of business.
 - Thus, notes received from officers, employees, shareholders, and affiliates shall be designated separately.
- A negotiable promissory note
 - an unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another, signed by the maker, engaging to pay a demand or at a fixed future date to a sum certain in money to order or to bearer.
 - A written contract in which one person, known as the maker, promises to pay another person, known as the payee.
- Dishonored notes
 - When a promissory notes matures and is not paid, it is said to be dishonored.
 - Theoretically, dishonored notes receivable should be removed from the notes receivable account and transferred to accounts receivable.
 - The amount debited to accounts receivable should include the face amount, interest and other charges.
 - Such approach is defended on the grounds that the overdue note has lost part of its status as a negotiable instrument and really represents only ordinary claims against the maker.
- Initial measurement of notes receivable
 - Conceptually, notes receivable shall be measure initially at present value.
 - The present value is the sum of all future cash flows discounted using the prevailing market rate of interest for similar notes.

- The prevailing market value rate of interest is actually the effective interest rate.
- However, short-term notes receivable shall be measured at face amount. Cash flow relating to short-term notes receivable are not discounted because the effect of discounting is usually not material.

➤ Interest-bearing notes receivable

- The initial measurement of long-term notes will depend on whether the notes are interest bearing or noninterest bearing.
- Interest bearing long-term notes are measured at face amount which is actually the present value upon issuance.
