

CHAPTER - 2

REVIEW OF LITERATURE

This chapter describes the existing studies in support of present topic. The review of literature is divided into six sections. Section A deals with studies related to sycophantic behaviour. Section B deals with studies related to hospitality culture. Section C deals with studies related to co-workers' trust. Section D deals with the studies in relation to co-workers' communication. Section E deals with the studies related to the employee turnover. Section F deals with the studies inter-related among all the variables, i.e. sycophantic behaviour, hospitality culture, co-workers' trust, co-workers' communication and employee turnover.

Section-A

2.1 Studies Related to Sycophantic Behaviour

Ralston (1985) examined two forces which cause the amount of ingratiation behaviour in the organization. The study explained three manipulative tactics, i.e. self-presentation, opinion conformity and other-enhancement. These three tactics were adopted by subordinates to build interpersonal relationships with their superior. The author focused on subordinate ingratiation behaviour with superior. The study concluded that ingratiation behaviour occurs with the combination of both the forces such as individually initiated as well as organizationally induced behaviour.

Ansari and Rehana (1986) investigated influence tactic. The focus given on behavioral strategies varies with respect to organizational climate and its goal (personal/organizational). The study also tried to find out the impact of characteristics of organizational environment by using upward influence tactic. The sample sizes comprised of 37 undergraduate students who adopted organizational behaviour course in IIT Kanpur, India. The study revealed that personal goal like career advancement can be achieved by using behavioral strategies. Also organizational climate showed a significant variation in the use of upward influence tactic.

Singh (1987) proposed a study of the unilateral structure of power and explained how controlled mechanism was used by subordinates to influence their supervisor.
