

Chapter 4: Managing Information Technology Systems for Global Performance

1. Introduction to Information Technology Systems
2. Global Performance and Information Technology
3. Managing Information Technology Systems
4. Global Performance and Information Technology

The first step in managing information technology systems is to identify the business goals and objectives that the system is intended to support. This involves understanding the current business environment and the challenges that the organization is facing. Once the goals and objectives are identified, the next step is to design the system architecture and the data architecture.

The second step in managing information technology systems is to implement the system. This involves installing the hardware and software, configuring the system, and testing the system. Once the system is implemented, the next step is to monitor the system performance and make adjustments as needed.

The third step in managing information technology systems is to maintain the system. This involves updating the system, fixing bugs, and ensuring that the system is secure. Once the system is maintained, the next step is to evaluate the system performance and make adjustments as needed.

The fourth step in managing information technology systems is to retire the system. This involves decommissioning the system, archiving the data, and disposing of the hardware. Once the system is retired, the next step is to evaluate the system performance and make adjustments as needed.
