C 2.1 Development of the periodic table AQA GCSE Chemistry C2 The Periodic Table Knowledge Answers (Page No. 23)

1. Mendeleev's Periodic Table was not perfect as some of the elements did not fit because the existing elements were ordered by atomic number, using which element did not present problems other than other facts that showed that some elements were not in the right place the table is given:

1. Gallium and Tellurium are the other two elements other than that argon and potassium that do not appear in the order of their relative atomic masses. Gallium has a lower relative atomic mass than Tellurium but comes next after Tellurium in the table – all the chemical properties of other groups.

2. Argon has a greater relative atomic mass than potassium. According to Mendeleev's periodic table, potassium should come first followed by argon. This resulted in the placement of argon at the end of the first section called the alkali.
