

TECH TIPS FOR WORKING REMOTE

LIMIT THE AMOUNT OF DEVICES CONNECTED TO YOUR WI-FI

A lot of devices competing for one network can cause internal traffic issues and downgrade performance when working remotely. Turn the wi-fi off on devices you aren't using during your work day. Also, if you've had the same router for more than five years, now may be a good time to upgrade.

BOOST YOUR INTERNET PLAN

How fast or slow an Internet connection depends on the service and level of service a customer has from their Internet Service Provider. You'll want to know your plan's upload and download speeds, particularly if your work involves teleconferencing, large file sharing, video editing and other bandwidth-intensive tasks.

SECURE YOUR HOME NETWORK

Make sure all devices on your home network including the ones you use for business have the latest software updates (which often contain critical security patches) and also update any anti-virus software.

GET YOURSELF A USB DOCK OR HUB

The problem is that modern laptops like the Dell XPS 13 or MacBook Pro don't offer many ports. A simple USB-C hub will give you extra USB-A ports for your old external hard drive or mouse, or even an HDMI port for displays. Get familiar with how Windows 10 works with split screens and multiple displays (or Mac, if that's your platform).

INVEST IN A WEBCAM AND HEADSET

Working from home means a lot more video calls. Teams like to see each other when they collaborate, meaning you'll want a good webcam and headset to make for a comfortable quality experience. You should be okay if your laptop already has a built-in webcam and microphone.

USE AN EXTERNAL KEYBOARD AND MOUSE

Investing in a good external keyboard and mouse will do wonders for your workspace. Not only are these input devices more versatile than your laptop's built-in options, but they're also often more comfortable to use as well. You will be able to work faster and be more productive with an external keyboard and mouse!
