ABSTRACT

Evaluation of natural resource management policies often is made difficult by lack of robust or long-term data on the resource. In the absence of empirical data, natural resource policy evaluation may rely on expert or stakeholder perception of success as a proxy, particularly in the context of policies that depend on multi-stakeholder engagement or negotiated rulemaking. However, few formal evaluations have compared empirical ecological outcomes with stakeholder perception. This study compares stakeholder perceptions of policy outcomes with ecological outcomes from a long-term, ecological dataset as part of the U.S. Marine Mammal Protection Act's Take Reduction Planning process. Structural Equation Models revealed that stakeholder perceptions were significantly and positively related to positive ecological outcomes. Also, perceived success and ecological performance rankings of the Take Reduction Plans were comparable for three of the five plans examined. This analysis suggests that for this particular policy instrument, stakeholder perception aligns well with ecological outcomes, and this positive relationship is likely the result of a commitment and support for stakeholder education and engagement. However, even within a single policy analysis, there was variability suggesting that the relationship between stakeholder perceptions and policy outcomes must continue to be evaluated. This study suggests that stakeholder perception can be an accurate reflection of ecological outcomes, but not necessarily a predictor of them.

1. Introduction

The U.S. federal government involves the public in regulation of natural resources along a continuum of engagement. At one end lies the command and control method wherein an administrative agency proposes regulations, releases them for public comment, modifies those rules in response, and implements final rules. At the other end of the continuum, stakeholders work directly with administrative agencies to devise regulations through consensus-based, multi-party negotiation, referred to as negotiated rule-making [1,2]. Various environmental agencies in the U.S. have embraced the latter approach, including the Environmental Protection Agency, Department of the Interior, and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) [3].

Assessing the efficacy of a policy in relation to program goals is fundamental to policy evaluation [4]. One critical metric of resource policy evaluation is whether the policy resulted in the intended goal, which is to improve resource condition, quality and quantity. However, for policies that are designed to protect natural resources, long-term resource monitoring data often are lacking. In lieu of direct data on the resource, other evaluations for environmental policies generated by multi-stakeholder programs may focus solely on the success of the negotiation process, while others focus on outputs or agreements resulting from the negotiation. Other evaluations focus on participant satisfaction with the process, which affects satisfaction with the outputs [5,6]. Participant satisfaction, however, may not be a good measure, proxy, or indicator of successful ecological outcomes [7–11]. Coglianese [9]

Comparative Risk Assessment Holger Schütz,2006-08-25 Providing a catalogue of suggested solutions for different categories of issues this book offers a balanced overview and methodological examples for the practical implementation of the CRA It considers CRA in the USA Europe and Germany using case studies to analyze and exemplify the decision making processes and challenges involved The authors then go on to look at the practical lessons learned from these case studies together with an in depth discussion of the underlying scientific hypotheses Sound scientific knowledge for everyone who makes decisions whether government ministers regulators or company directors      Second Rank Cities in Europe Roberto Camagni,Roberta Capello,2017-10-02 Second rank cities are back on the academic scene capturing the interest of scholars with their unexpected recent performance with respect to first rank cities Looking at the data on average urban GDP growth in 139 European cities since 1996 the relatively strong position of large cities over 1 5 million inhabitants on national growth coincides with the periods of fastest expansion while at times of slowdown second rank cities prevail Especially in the recent period of economic downturn second rank cities have recorded annual GDP growth rates much less negative than those of capital cities and in some European countries like Austria and Germany all cities have outperformed their capitals In explaining this phenomenon linking urban dynamics to agglomeration theories seems the most interesting approach However merely to link agglomeration economies to urban size in order to interpret urban performance is neither convincing nor sufficient and it calls for additional investigation into how agglomeration economies work This volume claims that interpretation of the current dynamics in European urban systems especially in the western part of Europe would benefit from exploitation of the traditional concept of agglomeration economies However necessary for this purpose are more in depth considerations on the nature scope intensity and causes of agglomeration economies which do not relate their existence solely to urban size And this is where the main challenge for scholars lies in the interpretation of the missing link between agglomeration economies and urban dynamics This book was originally published as a special issue of European Planning Studies      Researching English-Medium Higher Education Emma Dafouz,Ute Smit,2023-02-14 Set against the and market crop but also the cultivation of pre monsoon crops such as sesame Most farmers have traditionally been dealing with climatic risks by providing supplementary irrigation e g by establishing tube wells by cultivating short cycled cash crop instead of rice and by substituting annual crops by fruit orchards Some farmers have done changes in cropping patterns and agronomic practices These differentially affect adaptation to climate change and there are still needs of institutional support with the knowledge and technology for the unfinished adaptation measures There are the strong linkages between farmers perceptions and their adaptation to climate risks at the farm level and the adaptation measures are likely conducted on their own knowledge Traditional knowledge and expert knowledge must be combined in order to work for successful adaptation to climate change
