

Law of Conservation of Momentum

We have learned about momentum, but how does it work in collisions? When objects collide in a closed system one thing is definite; momentum is conserved

If the momentum lost by one object is then gained by another object, then the total amount is constant.

So what's an isolated system?

You be the judge. Which of the following situations are considered isolated systems?

1. Two cars collide on a gravel roadway on which frictional forces are large.
2. Hans Full is doing the annual vacuuming. Hans is pushing the Hoover vacuum cleaner across the living room carpet.
3. Two air track gliders collide on a friction-free air track.

One way to look at conservation of momentum is in terms of money exchange between two friends, Jack and Jill

Money Conservation in a Financial Interaction

	Before	After	Change
Jack	$100	$50	-$50
Jill	$100	$150	+$50
Total	$200	$200

Is this an isolated system? _____

What if Jill pockets $20, how does this change the system? _____
