improve Indian soldiers.

"posed in the course" the most calculated all of the state's resources.

being history. The spending upon other parts of southern India.

[4] The term Raj referred to British rule over India from 1857 until 1947.

Q-2. "Why did British consider India as "posed in the course"?

A. The British administration had to deal with the rapidly growing population, which was a major supplier of raw materials. In 1857, the British government had to deal with the Indian population of 100 million people, which was a large potential market for British goods. It is not an easy task, which is why the British considered India as "posed in the course".

Q-2. Why didn't Indians unite against the British in the early 19th century?

A. The Indians could not unite against the British due to the lack of leadership and the lack of a common language and culture. The British had a large army and a strong navy, which made it difficult for the Indians to fight back.

Q-2. What might the British have gained from the early 19th century with India and goods, but what about the British attitude towards Indians?

A. The British had gained the early 19th century's raw materials, which they used to produce goods. They also had a large market for their goods in India. However, the British attitude towards Indians was one of superiority and discrimination. They considered Indians as inferior and treated them as such.

Q-2. Why did the British consider India as "posed in the course" in the early 19th century?

A. The British considered India as "posed in the course" because they saw it as a source of raw materials and a market for their goods. They also saw it as a source of labor and a source of revenue. However, they also saw it as a source of competition and a source of conflict. They wanted to control India and to prevent it from becoming a rival power.
