

Chapter 20 Reading Guide: Africa and the Africans in the Age of the Atlantic Slave Trade

CHAPTER SUMMARY

Much of Africa followed its own lines of development between the beginning of the 15th and 19th centuries. The rise of the West and the Western-dominated economy, however, was a powerful force in influencing the course of African history. The Atlantic slave trade predominated in economic affairs after the middle of the 17th century. The forced removal of Africans had a major effect in some African regions and was a primary factor contributing to the nature of New World populations. African culture became one of the important strands in the development of American civilizations. Despite the rise of the West and the slave trade, nearly all of Africa remained politically independent and culturally autonomous. Among the important trends, Islam consolidated its position in sub-Saharan and east Africa, while in many parts of Africa, independent states formed and expanded.

3. Your text states there was "a diaspora of millions of Africans to the Middle East, Europe, and especially the Americas." Either based on the context or after looking up the term, explain what "diaspora" means.
4. What was the most significant point of contact between Europeans and Africans after 1450?
5. How did Africa and Latin America differ politically and culturally?

THE ATLANTIC SLAVE TRADE.

6. What European country was most heavily involved in the slave trade in its early years?
7. Why was it logical that this country would be the most involved in the slave trade?
