

Chapter 20: Community Ecology

Notes:

Chapter 20: Community: Interactions and integration by which organisms form or function influence the species involved

Section 20.1: Intro

Definition: The overall study of interactions between the groups of living organisms, including and interacting with the abiotic world. How are the species found in groups in the field?

Definition of community: groups of organisms in different parts of the same place, living together, interacting with each other.

What are the important interactions? What is a niche?

- Species life histories: individual features, species
- Community processes: diversity, succession, structure, environmental interactions
- Living organisms as organisms: effects on the environment and responded to and how the organisms interacted in the community.

How are organisms in ecological communities?

- Competition (1-2)
- Symbiosis (1-2)
- Structure (succession) (1-2 and 3-4)

1. Competition (1-2)

- Individuals within the same species compete with each other for the same resources (food, space, shelter) and reproduction and survival.
- Competition (1-2): there's always an ecological advantage to it.
- Competition (1-2): individuals of different species
- Competition between individuals of different species.

1. Ecological Niche

- The ecological ecological niche: a niche that is the environment that the species lives in. It is the niche that the species lives in and the niche that the species lives in.
- The niche of an organism is the niche that the organism lives in. It is the niche that the organism lives in and the niche that the organism lives in.
- The niche of an organism is the niche that the organism lives in. It is the niche that the organism lives in and the niche that the organism lives in.
- The niche of an organism is the niche that the organism lives in. It is the niche that the organism lives in and the niche that the organism lives in.
- The niche of an organism is the niche that the organism lives in. It is the niche that the organism lives in and the niche that the organism lives in.
