process plants must be designed to be easily reconfigured as and when necessary A Distributed Coordination Approach to Reconfigurable Process Control presents research that addresses this issue via developing a new distributed framework that will enable the building of a process control system that is capable of reconfigurability This framework views the process as a set of readily integrated modular process elements which operate relatively independently and are each supported by a degree of stand alone decision making capability The rationale and benefits of moving towards the new approach is demonstrated by means of a worked example of a real process plant The research will also help end users to gain an understanding of the economic aspects of material flows across their plants and the ways in which their processes can be integrated across the enterprise
